Although Julie currently lives in Midwest-America, she is from Quebec City, Canada. She is a writer, translator, dog mom, fitness pro and journal keeper. I absolutely love Julie's journaling style, along with the content of her journals. As a person who loves research and learning, I admire the different type of journaling. She journals research, spiritual pages, writer wisdom and much more.

In my interview questions I asked Julie what her favorite thing is about where she currently lives, she said a trail along a small river where she walks her dog, Solo. "It's great to be alone with nature and my big happy dog"

Winter is Julie's favorite season, she finds the cold invigorating and she loves the silence of winter. (I agree)

Julie has also written a book, so as an aspiring author I asked for a few tips. She said, "Read, Read, Read. It's the only way to learn" Read everything from the classics, best sellers to "trashy" books. Make a habit of writing everyday. Try to write in different styles. Join creative writing groups and get other opinions about your writing. An outsiders eye can provide some important wisdom.
